The Montana Department of Transportation (MDT) is working to reconstruct nearly 37 miles of Montana Highway 200 (MT 200) between Jordan and Brockway to provide a more efficient travel experience and improve access for all users.

MT 200 was built in the early to mid-1900s and was not constructed to accommodate today's larger-sized vehicles. Reconstruction will bring the highway into modern design standards by widening the roadway, adding shoulders, and increasing lines of sight.

It's a big project comprised of five phases that will take several years to complete. MDT crews and contractors are committed to building a better road with minimal inconvenience to the traveling public.

HOW WILL THIS IMPACT ME?

During construction season, there will be traffic reconfigurations, temporary signals, and reduced speeds. Short delays of up to 15 minutes may occur.

WHAT WILL THIS COST?

The cost to reconstruct all 37 miles of MT 200 is estimated at $75 - $95 million. Much of the funding, between 86 - 100%, will come from federal sources. The remaining funds will come from Montana Gas Tax funds.
